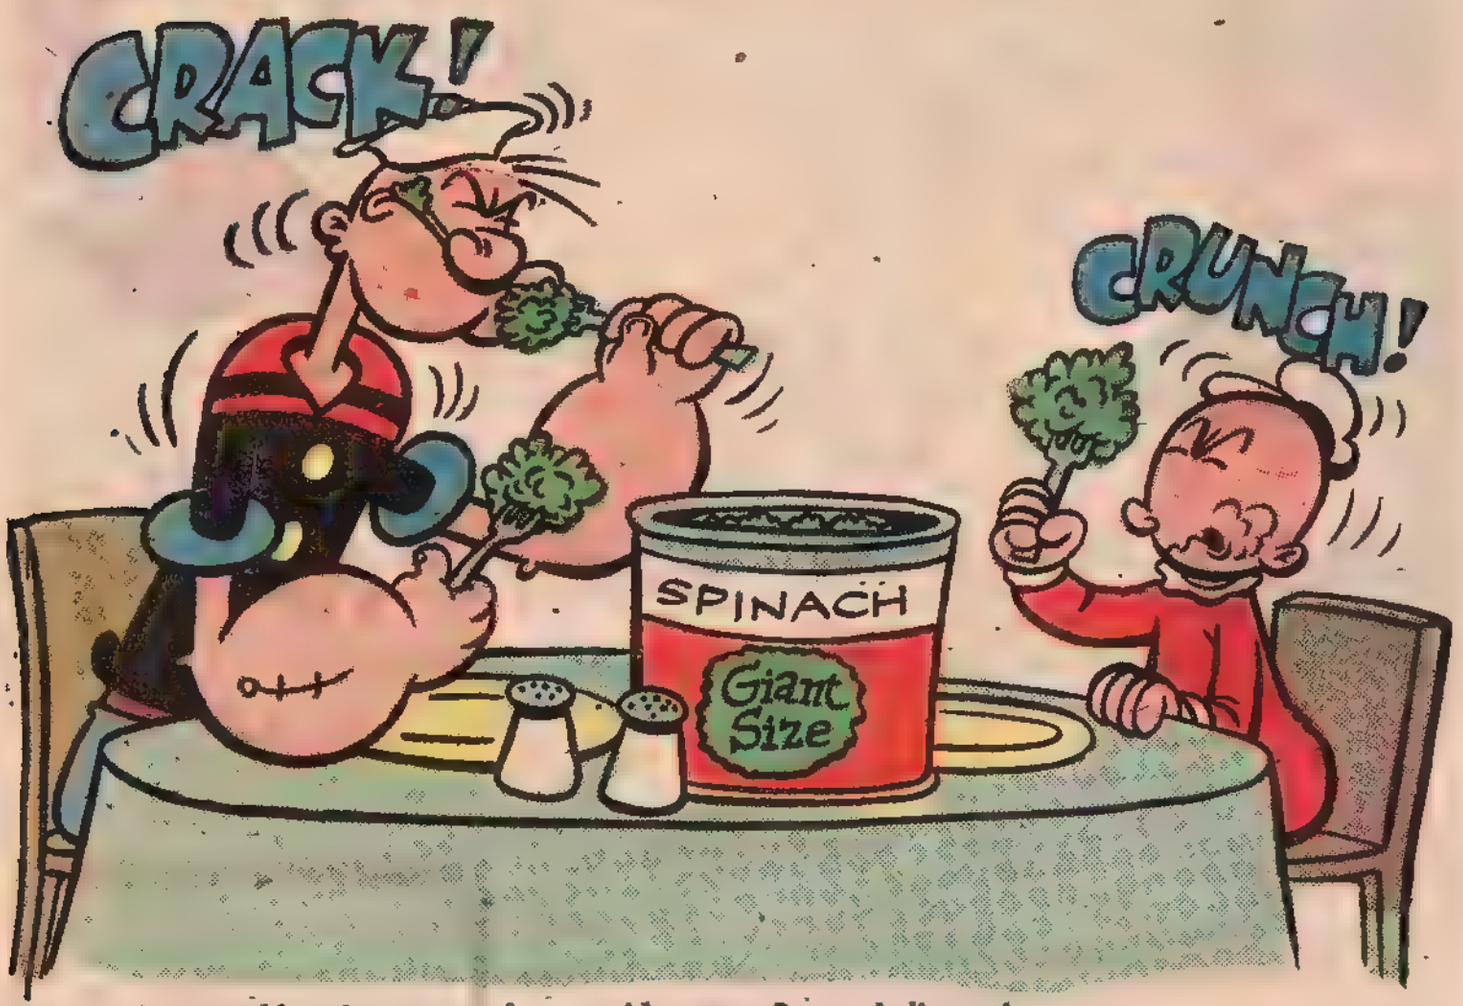
POPEYE'S PREDIKAMENT



Popeye had a problem. It was more than a problem, Popeye thought.

"It is a predikament!" Popeye said to himself. "A probulum is something yer can find a answer to. A predikament is a probulum wot don't add up."

His problem was simple enough. That morning, he and Swee'pea had gone to the supermarket and on their shopping list they had only the most needed items. Spinach. Spinach salad. Spinach soup. Spinach bread. Spinach jam. And spinach deodorant so Popeye and Swee'pea would smell good after they took their bath. Using spinach soap, of course.

But the shelves were empty. The only spinach left in the whole store was the color of the walls which had been painted spinach green. Popeye indignantly looked for the manager and found him. A very dignified gentleman who usually ran a hamburger palace. His name was Roughhouse.

"Where at is all the spinach, Roughhouse?" asked Popeye indignantly.

"Brutus got it, Popeye," Roughhouse replied. "He bought all that stuff. I asked him if he liked spinach that much an' he said he hated the stuff. Why would anybody buy a lotta stuff he hates?"

Popeye looked at Swee'pea and Swee'pea told him the answer.

"He is buyin' up all the spinach in town, Popeye!" Swee'pea said. "When he gets it all, he will make us pay lots more bucks for that stuff."

Popeye looked shocked.

"That ain't not legal!" Popeye protested. "Wot will I do without my spinach-flavored oatsmeal tomorrow mornin'?"

Roughhouse looked spinach-colored. "Spinach-flavored oatmeal?"

Popeye nodded. "It is dee-liskious!" Popeye said. "What I like even better is spinach short cake with plenny o' whipped cream an' lots o' spinach."

Swee'pea was looking worried.

"Wot'll we do, Popeye? A boy kid needs his spinach ter grow up right!"

Popeye looked around at the spinach-less store. He looked mad!

"We is genter visit Brutus, Swee'pea!" Popeye told him. "Come on!"

So Popeye and Swee'pea headed for Brutus' house. As they neared it, they sniffed a fragrance that almost drove them both crazy. It was spinach! And when they got there, his yard was piled full of boxes of fresh spinach, crates of canned spinach, spinach soup, spinach etc. It was a tantalizing sight for two spinach-starved spinach-lovers.

"Ahoy, ya swab!" Popeye called to Brutus who was sitting on a ten foot high pile of crates of spinach manicuring his fingernails. "Is yer genter sell us some o' that spinach or is I genter have ta knock yer choppers out?"

Brutus smirked.

"Why, you squinch-eyed, bow-legged, ugly, little runt," Brutus replied politely, "without spinach you couldn't even beat up on that kid who looks just like you!"

Swee'pea lit up proudly. "I does?"

Popeye glared at Swee'pea. "Don't get a swelled-up head, Swee'pea. Brutus is so iggerant he wuz tryin' ta insulk ya!"

Popeye looked up at Brutus. "Now, c'mon offa that pile o' spinach an' sell me some before I comes up there and lays ya away among the swee'peas!"

Brutus laughed.

"Just try it, runt!"

Popeye started to climb the piled-up boxes. But without spinach he didn't have his usual spryness. When he did reach the top, Brutus was waiting and he belted Popeye clear across the street.

He rang Popeye's chimes with that one. Swee'pea was weak too, or he'd have gone up and smacked Brutus himself. As it was, he went to Popeye and urged him to battle.

"Get up, Popeye," Swee'pea encouraged. "Brutus can't hurt us."

Popeye was seeing two Swee'peas. He was also seeing two Brutuses which was worse. "He can't? Then someone made a erful mistake cause my head hurts sumpin' terrible."

However, Popeye struggled to his feet and went back over to try Brutus again. Brutus kept shining the nails on his left hand as he nonchalantly wound up and belted Popeye with his right. This time Popeye bounced off two houses, went sixty-three feet in the air, and came down nearby.

"That's that, ya bow-legged runt!" Brutus said. He tore open a crate and stuck a bunch of spinach plants on Popeye's stomach. "These'll have to take the place of the lilies which I don't happen to have just now."

Popeye laid there. Swee'pea felt awful. But Popeye, unconscious though he was, caught the fragrant aroma of fresh spinach. In his sleep, he breathed deeply and Swee'pea gasped as he inhaled all the spinach.

Brutus was turning away when Popeye's eye opened.

"Just a spinach-pickin' minute, Brutus," Popeye said. "We is got some unfinished bizness!"

Brutus looked shocked. He turned around just in time to get slammed in the jaw by Popeye's spinach-strengthened fist. Then, he got hit again. Popeye bounced him off the spinach, the house, then dribbled him around awhile and tossed him through his own front window. It was open.

"Now, Brutus," Popeye said as Brutus wobbily answered his doorbell. "I is genter take all this spinach off yer hands at half-price. Is it a deal?"

Brutus looked at the fist holding the money under his nose, shuddered, and accepted.

"Let's go, Swee'pea," Popeye said starting down the street. "I is givin' a spinach party. You is the smilliest one invited. ARF ARF!"
